Miss Anne Brewster, a sister of Attorney-General Brewster, is quite a chatterer at Rome. She is the author of two books, "St. Martin's Summer" and "Always a Future," and is an interesting correspondent of several Philadelphia papers. She has many little peouliarities which were written up in capital style by Miss Tinker in her "By the Tiber." She is very petite in stature and has a pleasant face. She is a charming hostess and entertains with rare grace and dignity, and at her receptions one meets all of the prominent Americans traveling abroad, as well as many foreigners of rank and distinction, and as she is a devout Roman Catholic, all of the higher church dignitaries visit her.
